A curious cat

As the sky slowly shimmers in the colours reminiscent of her hair, a purple slowly turning dark blue. The night is falling, and she has a curiosity she must clench. A smile spreads as she stands at the foot of the big, abandoned house with a remote in hand.

Opening the ragged door, dust spreads, the remote beeps and she choughs, trying to looks around. Stretching out the remote, she follows the beeps, the more, the better. She'll find that ghost.

Moving further in, starting to realise that a dust mask could have be good to have. Though, it won't stop her, the remote is beeping more and more. She's getting closer.

Up the stairs, through a dilapidated corridor. The beeps lead her forward while she avoids any unstable looking planks.

Then, a wall.

Shoot.

Who could have predicted such a predicament?

Regardless, she's not one to give up that easily. She's like a cat in the night, wanting to explore and learn, and catch something new.

She touches the wall, wondering what secrets it might hold. She gives it a knock. Huh. She knocks again, taking note of the hollow sound, then tries to knock on the same wall a few paces away.

It's different!

She perks up, running back to the spot in which she was stopped.

There must be a secret hidden.

She will find it.

Feeling the wall, pressing down on anything that feels odd, nothing. Taking a step back, she looks around. What's missing? Is she not seeing the full picture?

A dark candle sconce is attached to the wall.

Hmm...

It brings forth a childish thought, but... why not?

She pulls at it.

It breaks.

She falls.

She hits the floor.

She falls.

She hits... something sloshy.

The fall was dampened, and she can move without pain, but... she doesn't dare look down. Eyes fixated on the hole above. Hands feel wet. Whatever sha landed in, it feels organic and fresh. It's not a ghost, it's too corporeal for that.

Slowly trying to move away from the pile.

Everything moves like balls in a ball pit submerged in slime.

Finally, she reaches the end, the end of the apparent box she's found herself in. Still looking up; she climbs out. Only to hear the echoing of steps approach. Her remote starts to beep, where it's submerged in the pile. Directing her eyes down before she can stop herself.

Freeze.

Her body stills as a burning acid starts to fill her thought and a cold shiver claws it way up her spine. Jaw shakes. Eyes dart around. As two thoughts fill her mind.

'I need to get out.'

And.

'Curiosity killed the cat.'